THE TEXT

❶ Chapman Shum, 13, has made remarkable progress in music. Despite having a rare disease that caused his blindness from birth as well as speech and learning difficulties, Chapman has found success with music. His love for music began at the age of five when he taught himself to play the piano. By the age of eleven, Chapman turned what seemed impossible into reality. He passed the grade 8 piano exam with flying colors. Over the past two years, he has gone on to showcase his talent all over Britain.

❸ Chapman's story demonstrates the transformative effects of music on individuals with handicaps. His journey is an inspiring one. His goal is not only to attract the audience to his music but also to set an example to other children who have learning difficulties. Thanks to his musical talent, Chapman was nominated Young Person of the Year in 2023. It was a valuable award for his successful performances.
